Compliance Benchmarking

EMC's consultants have the expertise necessary to help you keep on top of regulatory standards.

It can be difficult to navigate the rules of the many agencies that regulate your workplace. Between OSHA, NFPA, ADA and other regulatory standards, it's natural to be unsure about what measures you should take to keep your employees safe. EMC's loss control specialists can identify noncompliance issues that may be hazardous to your employees and offer practical solutions for improvement.

On-Site Facility Survey

An EMC consultant will tour your facility, documenting and photographing the location of all observed hazards. Because our consultants have expertise in a wide range of safety topics, you can be sure they will focus on everything from electrical safety to machine safeguarding. At your request, they can even talk with employees during the walkthrough to assess their safety knowledge (for example, where they should go during a fire evacuation).

Review Of Written Programs And Training Records

During the Compliance Benchmarking process, a consultant can review your written safety programs to determine if you are in compliance with applicable standards. They can also discuss your current training programs to determine if changes in training types or frequency would be beneficial. If additional training is needed, a consultant may be able to help design or deliver it.

Formal Report

A few weeks after the on-site survey, you will receive a report detailing the findings. This report will include:

- Description of the cited observation
- Photo of the cited observation (where appropriate)
- Location where the observation was noted
- Regulatory standard the observation violates
- One or more possible solutions to help bring you into compliance
